CHAPTER V

CONCLUSION AND SUGGESTION

5.1 Conclusion

This chapter presents the conclusion of the research based on the analysis and discussion explained in the previous chapter. It includes the kinds of the figurative language used in The Great Gatsby’s Movie. In the other hand, this chapter also presents the suggestion of the research. Both of them will be formulated below.

There are four types of figurative language used in The Great Gatsby’s Movie based on Kennedy. From four types of figurative language are comparative, contradictive, correlative, and repetition figurative language. Comparative is divided into three parts; Personification, Metaphor, and simile. Contradictive is divided into four parts; Hyperbole, Litotes, Paradox, and Irony. Correlative is divided into five parts; Metonymy, synecdoche, Symbol, Allusion, and Ellipsis. Repetition is divided into four parts: Pleonasm, Climax and anti-climax, and Rhetoric.

Based on the analysis, the researcher finds there are seven data that contain personification, three data contain metaphor, ten data contain simile. There are three data that contain Hyperbole, two data contain Litotes. Then, there are two data contain ellipsis, seven data contain climax and anti-climax. After analysis the first problem of study, the researcher also gives the functional description to answer the second of research question about the function of figurative language, the researcher only found one type that has the different function, it is ellipsis. The function of ellipsis is to simplify a sentences, the rule of ellipsis is omitting word or clause. There is no the function of every parts of figurative language just only one that is ellipsis. But over all the functions of figurative language is to create good effect, effective sentence, and suggestive. The figurative language make the interested writing, more clear and describe clearly what we think. The figurative language can give the love to the readers. Can get the adding imagination although the abstract things become concrete and the reader can be enjoyable. It is also adding the intensive feeling of the author in delivering a meaning and behavior. From previous study and this research, the researcher hopes this research can give contribution to develop our knowledge about linguistic, especially figurative language field.

Afterward, the researcher hopes that this research can enrich our knowledge about the types of figurative language where the people can develop their ability to concentrate in describing the word, phrase, and sentence to make a good interpretation.

5.2 Suggestion

After conducting this research, the researcher offers some suggestions that may be useful for student of English Department other researchers who are interested to conduct an analysis of figurative language. This research uses Kennedy’s theory and other theory to support this research. The researcher suggests to the reader to analyze figurative language such as irony, such as irony, allusion, pleonasm, and rhetoric with other object more deeply such as poem, song, drama or advertisement. The next research also can make this research as object to elaborate and compare the problem of study with other theory.
