A. Finding

The researcher described the data which have been got from several kinds of data collection technique. Concerning with the students’ understanding and the students’ ability to use literary elements in writing narrative text, the researcher has done four data collection techniques in order to get more complete data. They were tests, collect students’ assignment, interview, and documentation. While doing the tests, the teacher gave the test to the students which were prepared by the researcher. The teacher controlled the students when they did the test. After the students did the test, the teacher collected and gave it back to the researcher. Then, the researcher analyzed the result of the students’ test by using the marking scale from David Harris.

The next step was asking the students to write narrative text. The students wrote two narrative texts with different topic. The topic has been held by the researcher. The first topic was Cinderella and the second topic was the golden cucumber. The teacher watched when the students wrote narrative text. Then, the teacher collected and gave it to the researcher. Then, the researcher used the indicators from National assessment program-literacy and numeracy that related with the measurement of students’ ability in using literary element in writing narrative text. Then, the researcher used marking scale which was adapted from David Harris to determine the students’ grade in writing narrative text.

The researcher interviewed the teacher and students with the questions that related with the measurement of students’ ability in using literary elements of narrative text and students’ understanding about literary elements itself. In fact, the researcher interviewed the teacher and the students because the researcher wanted to emphasize the result data of students’ writing. By interviewing the teacher and the students directly, the researcher was able to gain more information about the students’ understanding, the students’ ability in using literary elements of narrative text and the problems faced by the students when they wrote narrative text.

The researcher presented the results of the data in detailed information. The data consist of two discussions relating to this research. They are: The students’ understanding of literary elements in narrative text and the students’ ability to use literary elements in writing narrative text

1. Students’ Understanding of Literary Elements in Writing Narrative Text

The researcher took 35 students as the subject of this research. The researcher conducted two tests to know students’ understanding of literary elements itself. The researcher used the formula in determining the highest frequency of the students understanding about literary elements.

The formula is:

\[ P = \frac{F}{N} \times 100\% \]

Notes:
- \( p \) = percentage
- \( F \) = frequency
- \( N \) = number of sample

a) Analysis of the First Test

This test was conducted on Tuesday, April 21, 2015. There were 35 students who followed the test. They had to answer 20 questions based on their understanding individually. This test was done by the students after the teacher explained the material about narrative text. The students’ result of the first test can be seen on the table 4.1. (See appendix III). The data was presented in percentage form also to help the reader to interpret the data easily.
The researcher concluded that the 11th grade got 8.57% as excellent grade. It was because there were three students got wrong answer for one question. 14.29% for very good grade because there were five students got wrong answer for three questions. 11.43% for very poor grade because there were four students got wrong answer for eleven questions. 25.71% for good grade because there were nine students got wrong answer for five questions. 8.57 for poor grade because there were three students got wrong answer for nine questions and 31.43% for fair grade because there were eleven students got wrong answer for six questions. Therefore, the highest grade of the first test was fair grade. It was because most of the students got wrong answers for seven questions. They were the number 2, 4, 10, 12, 13, 15 and 16. (See appendix 1)
b) Analysis of the Second Test

The second test was conducted on Tuesday, April 28, 2015. There were 35 students who followed the test. In the second test, the students had to determine the characters, setting, plot, theme of narrative text and match the literary terms with the definitions.

The students’ result of the second test can be seen on the table 4.2. (See appendix III). The data was presented in percentage form also to help the reader to interpret the data easily.

The Percentage of the Second Students’ Test

The result of the students’ second test could be seen on the chart above. There was 2.86% for excellent grade. It was because there were one student got wrong answer for one question. 11.43% for very good grade because there were four students got wrong answer for three questions. 5.71% for very poor grade because there were two students got wrong answer for eleven questions. 31.43% for good grade because there were eleven students got wrong answer for five questions. 11.43 for poor grade because there four three students got wrong answer for nine questions and 37.14% for fair grade because there were thirteen students got wrong answer for six questions. Therefore, the highest grade of the second test students was fair grade. It was because most of the students got wrong answers for seven questions. They were the number 4, 5, 6, 9, 10, 11 and 13. (See appendix 1)

c) The final result of the students understanding of Literary Elements in Writing Narrative Text

The researcher presented the accumulation the result of the first test and the second test. In the first test, there were 3 excellent grades, 5 very good grades, 9 good grades, 11 fair grades, 3 poor grade and 4 very poor grades. And in the second test, there were 1 excellent grade, 4 very good grades, 11 good grades, 13 fair grades, 4 poor grades and 2 very poor grades. Thus, the result both of test were 4 excellent grades, 9 very good grades, 20 good grades, 24 fair grades, 7 poor grades and 6 very poor grades. The researcher presented the result both of the tests in form of chart in order to make the result more clearly.
The students’ understanding about literary elements could be seen on the chart above. Therefore, the highest frequency of students’ understanding about literary elements was fair grade. It was because most of the students answer incorrectly for seven questions.

2. Students’ Ability to Use Literary Elements in Writing Narrative Text

The students asked to write two narrative texts with different topic. The students who asked to write narrative text were the students at eleventh grade. Therefore, the researcher focused on analyze the literary elements, like: plot, character, setting and theme. The researcher analyzed students’ writing by using the indicators from National assessment program-literacy and numeracy that has strong relation with students’ ability in using literary element in writing narrative text. Then, the
The researcher used marking scale which was adapted from David Harris.\textsuperscript{64} The researcher used the formula to find out the percentage of the students' ability to use literary elements in writing narrative text.

The formula is:

\[ P = \frac{F}{N} \times 100\% \]

a) Analysis of the first students' writing about Cinderella

This assignment was conducted on Wednesday, April 22, 2015. There were 35 students who followed this assignment. They had to write narrative text about Cinderella. The duration was about 60 minutes. In this assignment, the students did not work in a group anymore, but they did individually. The teacher controlled when the students wrote narrative text. Then, after the students finished write narrative text the teacher collected and then gave it to the researcher. The researcher made the recapitulation of the first students' writing on the table 4.3. \textit{(See appendix III)}. The researcher also presented the

There were 74.29% students got fair grade and 25.71% students got good grade. Based on that result, the researcher concluded that the highest frequency of the first students’ writing about Cinderella was fair grade. It was because most of them described the character of the narrative text by using brief descriptions or speech. The students described the plot coherently but the resolution of the story was unclear. The students used setting which consist of place and time but there was not description about it. And the coherent of the idea in the story still few. The researcher presented 4 the examples of the students’ writing.
Cinderella

Once upon a time, there was a girl called Cinderella. Cinderella lived happily with mother and father until her mother died. Cinderella’s father married again to a woman who has two daughters. Cinderella treated very badly when her father not in home.

However, there was no explanation about where the story took place. In the rising action, she presented the narrow event that complicates the situation. Whereas, in the rising action, the main problem has to start and becomes clear. In the climax, she made the story become interesting. It was because she wrote events in the high point, like; Prince invited to all women to come to his party because he wanted to find a wife. They come to Prince’s party but step sisters did not allow Cinderella to go. In the falling action, she tried to resolve the problem and the story ended in the resolution. However, the resolution was weak. In the narrative text above, the idea showed development. It was because she described all idea relate coherently to a central storyline.

There were two kinds of characters that used in this narrative text. There were protagonist and antagonist. In introducing the character, she only used names and their roles, like; Cinderella, father, step mother, step sisters, fairy god mother, and prince. There were not descriptions or speech that explained the characters. She used place and time as the setting of the story. She only used names of place and time. There was not description about them. From the category above, she got 2 scores for plot, 1 score for character, 2 scores for setting, and 3 scores for theme. Therefore, she got 8 score as the total. It included in the fair grade. She got difficulty in constructing her idea into writing and it made her need more than 60 minutes to write narrative text.

It was the rising action. In the researcher’s opinion he described the high point is not climax. It was because he did not tell what the stepmother did when she prohibited Cinderella came to the party. In the falling action, he described the problem solving very clearly. There was good falling action “Cinderella very disappointed with her stepmother, Cinderella cry in backyard. Mom a fairy came and surprised Cinderella. Mom a fairy said “you came to the party” “seriously?” answer Cinderella.” It was good falling action because this part made the reader feel what Cinderella’s feeling. However, the 3rd student did not tell how Prince’s feeling to Cinderella in the falling action.

Fifthly, they rarely practice to write something.

B. Discussion

The researcher presented discussion based on the findings of the research. This discussion deal with the research question of this study, these are: the students’ understanding of literary elements and the students’ ability to use literary elements in writing narrative text.
I. The Students’ Understanding of Literary Elements

The researcher analyzed the students’ understanding of literary elements. Hamzah and Satria stated that understanding covers students’ competences in defining, interpreting, translating, explaining, comparing or expressing something by their own ways based on knowledge they have been gotten.\(^\text{73}\)

The students’ understanding of literary elements has measured by conducting the test. Muhammad Risal said that test is an instrument which has function to measure students’ understanding.\(^\text{74}\) There were two tests. In the first test, the students answered 20 questions individually. The test was multiple choices. However, most of students got incorrect answers on the number 2, 4, 10, 12, 13, 15 and 16.

The number 2 was talking about parts of story outline. Story outline means plot. Most of the students answered A. It was introduction, conflict, problem, resolution and ending. It was not in line with the theory that explained in the chapter 2 which explained about Freitag’s pyramid. The Freitag’s pyramid consists of exposition, rising action, climax, falling action and resolution. Therefore, the correct answer was B. It was introduction, rising action, climax, falling action and conclusion. The number 4 was talking who is the main character of the story. Most of the students answered A. It was the main man. It was not in line with the theory that explained by Judith A. Stanford that “The protagonist is the major character with whom we generally sympathize…” Therefore, the correct answer was D. It was protagonist.

The number 10 was talking about kind of narrative text. Most of the students answered D. It was novel and fable. It was not in line with the theory that explained by David Herman that there are two types of narrative text which consists of fictional narrative and non-fictional narrative. Therefore, the answer was not in line with the theory. Hence, the correct answer was B. It was fictional narrative and non-fictional narrative.

The number 12 was talking about some types of conflict characters. Most of the students answered A. It was happy, sad, old-fashioned and modern. However, Mark Nichol said that there are seven types of narrative conflict. They are person vs. fate/god, person vs. self, person vs. person, person vs. society, person vs. nature, person vs. supernatural and person vs. technology.\(^78\) Therefore, the answer was not in line with the theory in this research that explained by Mark Nichol. The answer related with the theory was person vs. person, person/society, person/self, person/nature, person vs. supernatural or person vs. God. Therefore, the correct answer was B.

The number 13 was talking about person who tells the story. Most of the students answered D. It was character. It was not in line with the statement that explained Jeromy beaty in this research that the teller of a story is the narrator.\(^79\) Therefore, the correct answer was A. It was narrator.

The number 15 was talking about the definition of theme. Most of the students answered B. It was the reason behind the writing of a story or poem. It was not in line with the theory that explained by Holt, Rinehart and Winston said that an idea about life conveyed through the story’s characters, actions, and images. Furthermore, Rizka Safriani said a theme is not a moral message only; it can be what the happenings of story. Therefore, the correct answer was C. It was the big ideas or central messages in a story or poem.

The number 16 was talking about some ways to know the character. Most of the students answered B. It was by reading the whole book before judging the person in the story. It was not in line with the theory that explained by Robert Di Yanni that a reader can identify the character of story by some ways, like, characters’ action (what they do), characters’ speech (what they say and how they say it) and characters’ consciousness (what they think and feel). Therefore, the correct answer was A. It was what they say, what others say about them, and by the characters’ action.

In the second test, the students also answered 20 questions which consist of 5 essays and 15 matching the definition with the literary terms. The students got incorrect answers at the number 4, 5, 6, 9, 10, 11 and 13.

The literary terms of the number 4 was falling action. Most of the students answered events of a story. It was not in line with the theory that explained by Mark Flanagan that the falling action is the sequence of events that follow the climax and end in the resolution. This is in contrast to the rising action which leads up to the plot's climax. Therefore, the correct answer was everything starting to calm down.

The literary terms of the number 5 was orientation. Most of the students answered non-fictional narrative. It was not in line with the theory that explained by Robert Di Yanni that exposition provides background information of the setting, and introduces the major characters. Therefore, the correct answer was (introduction) in which the characters and setting of the story are established.

The literary terms of the number 6 was fictional narrative. Most of the students answered the person telling the story. It was not in line with the theory in this research that explained by Jane Buckner that a fictional narrative is a work of art, carefully crafted by the author to provide entertainment for the reader. Therefore, the correct answer was telling a story. It was because story includes in art and has function to entertainment the reader.

The literary terms of the number 9 was major character. Most of the students answered bad guy. The bad guy was not related to major character. The correct answer was protagonist and antagonist. It was because according to Judith A. Stanford that “The protagonist is the major character with whom we generally sympathize, while the antagonist is the character with whom the protagonist is in conflict, the antagonist is generally not sympathetic.” Therefore, the answer was not in line with the theory.

The literary terms of the number 10 climax. Most of the students answered tension, problem, issue, and strife. The correct answer was the high point of interest in a story. It was because tension, problem, issue, and strife were the literary terms of conflict. X.J Kennedy said that “Climax or turning point is the moment of greatest tension.” Therefore, the answer was not in line with the theory.

The literary terms of the number 11 was resolution. Most of the students answered everything staring to calm down. The answer was not related with statement that explained by Holt, Rinehart and Winston that “Resolution is the final part of plot, in which events are wrapped up and the story comes to a conclusion.” Therefore, the correct answer was final outcome. The answer was not in line with the theory.

The literary terms of the number 13 was history. Most of the students answered telling a story. Kori Morgan stated that non-fictional narrative (factual narrative) is the story that tells about someone or something that seems real and vivid. Therefore, the answer was not in line with the theory. It was because story happened in an imaginary world whereas history was factual narrative. Therefore, the correct answer was non-fictional narrative.

2. The Students’ Ability to Use Literary Elements in Writing Narrative text

In writing narrative text, the students described series of event about story. Sandra Kaliszewski stated that “Narrative is the representation of an event or a series of events, where an event can be equated as an action. In this research, the students wrote narrative text about Cinderella and the golden cucumber.

Based on the result of the finding, the students used literary elements in writing narrative text which consist of plot, character, setting and theme. This finding was related as the statement of Susan Dymock that states narrative text need characters, place, time, problem, and solution. Therefore, the using of literary elements in writing narrative text has in line with the theory.

In describing the plot, the students described series of events or the problems that faced by the character. This finding was related as the statement of Jeromy Beaty that plot is the arrangement of the action, an imagined event or a series of events. The students described parts of plot systematically. It consists of exposition, rising action, climax, falling action and resolution. However, there was some students missed one part of plot, like rising action of the story. They said that they confused to start the problem in writing narrative text.

The students described the background information about the major character and the setting in the exposition of the story. For example: once upon time, life some beautiful people and her name is Cinderella. She felt very happy when her mother still live. But when her mother passed away her days is very sadness. The exposition was in line with the theory that stated by Robert Di Yanni that exposition gives background information of the action, describe the setting and introduce the major character.\(^93\) However, they did not tell where the story occurred. Meanwhile, Jerome Beaty said that all stories are embedded in setting; a time and place.\(^94\) Therefore the setting of the exposition above was not in line with the theory that explained by Jerome Beaty. In describing the setting, the student did not use descriptions. They only use names and roles of setting.

In describing the characters, the students used brief description and speech to explain the characterization of the story. They also used names and roles of characters. In writing narrative text, the students only used the major character. The major character consists of protagonist and antagonist, like Cinderella and step mother. It related with theory by Judith A. Stanford that, “The protagonist is the major character with whom we generally sympathize, while the antagonist is the character with whom the protagonist is in conflict, the antagonist is generally not sympathetic.\(^95\)

In the rising action, the students have to describe if the main story or the main problem started, like; Cinderella’s father married again to a woman who has two daughters. Cinderella treated very badly when her father not in home. The finding was related with the theory by Jerome Beaty that, “Rising action is events that complicate the situation and intensify or complicate the conflict or introduce new ones.”\(^96\) Similar to this theory, Terry Hirscherg stated that, “Complication instigates a clash between one character and another or between a character and the forces of nature or society, that sets the plot in motion.”\(^97\) Therefore the rising action of the narrative text was in line with what is required with the theory which explained by Jerome Beaty and Terry Hirscherg.

The students described the high point of the story. X.J Kennedy argued that “Climax or turning point is the moment of greatest tension.”\(^98\) For example, seventeen later, Timun mas grows up to 17 years old. Suddenly, Buto Ijo come back to take a back Timun mas. After that Mbok Rondo ask to Timun mas “go away from the house and bring this pocked to protect you”. And then Timun mas run so fast, and Buto Ijo chases then Timun mas threw the cucumber seeds and that seed grow quickly and inhibit its way, but Buto Ijo can still qualify and pursue back Timun mas. That was the high point of the golden cucumber story. Therefore, the finding connected with the theory that explained by X.J Kennedy. However, most of students got difficulty in developing ideas to make the climax in greatest tension.

In the falling action, the students explained if the complication begins to be resolved. Mark Flanagan stated that the falling action is the sequence of events that follow the climax and end in the resolution. This is in contrast to the rising action which leads up to the plot's climax. For example, suddenly, there was a fairy godmother who helps to come to the palace with the help of a wave of a magic wand which help Cinderella prepare to go to the palace. All the people were amazed when Cinderella arrives. Then, the prince took Cinderella to dance. He falls in love with Cinderella. That paragraph explained if the story started to calm down. Therefore, the finding connected by the theory that explained by Mark Flanagan.

In the resolution, the students wrote the final story, like; then, Buto Ijo drown and died. Timun mas went home. Since then, Timun mas and Mbok Rondo lived happily. The finding was related with the theory by Holt, Rinehart and Winston that "Resolution is the final part of plot, in which events are wrapped up and the story comes to a conclusion." However, most of students described the resolution weakly. They had to describe the resolution in detail explanation. They had to develop their idea in order to their story more interesting.

In short, this is the end of fourth chapter which described the finding and discussion of this research. In this chapter, the researcher has been answered the two research problems with related to this research.
