CHAPTER 1

INTRODUCTION

1.1. Background of the Study

Russia, or officially known as The Russian Federation is a country that stretches over a vast expanse of Eastern Europe and northern Asia (Britannica 1). With very great size of territory at 17.075.400 square kilometres, Russia by far is the largest country in the world. The territory is nearly twice the territory of Canada, the second largest country. The same as its territory, Russia also occupy the rank as the ninth country in the world that had most population with 143.819.000 people in year 2014.

Even though Russia has great scale in territory, this country did not get its glory easily. Before it becomes a Union Republic, Russia was part of The Soviet Union. The Russian republic was established after the Russian Revolution of 1917 and became a union republic in 1922. After dissolve itself from The Soviet Union, Russian was experienced political and economy changes. They had to endure a generally weak in economy, high inflation, and a complex of social ills that served to lower life expectancy significantly (Britannica 1).

Russia has experienced some revolutions. Revolution is a complex series of events by any product of interaction (Strauss 1). On the other hand, Laura Neitzel on her journal What Is Revolution states that as a historical process, “revolution” refers to a movement, often violent, to overthrow an old regime and effect complete change in the fundamental institutions of society (Neitzel 1). Different from Neitzel and Strauss’ definition, Hannah Arendt, a Germanic political theorist in her book On Revolution came up with the idea about revolutions in the modern age. In that book she said that:

Revolutions in the modern age is that the idea of freedom and the experience of a new beginning should coincide. And since the current notion of the Free World is that freedom, and neither justice nor greatness, is the highest criterion for judging the constitutions of political bodies, it is not only our understanding of revolution but our conception of freedom, clearly revolutionary in origin, on which may hinge the extent to which we are prepared to accept or reject this coincidence (Arendt 29).

Revolution had been a tradition in Russia. It is considered as a tradition because revolution in Russia happens more than once. Started from the small revolution in the early 1870s that caused by the intelligentsia's idealization of the peasantry and frustration with its own situation and the prospects for political reform led to the spontaneous mass movement which best exemplifies Populist aspirations. Thousands of students and members of the intelligentsia left the cities to go to the villages (Fitzpatrick 24). After that, there was revolutionary terrorism in the late 1870s, motivated by the Populists' desire to avenge their imprisoned comrades and partly by the rather desperate hope that a well placed blow might destroy the whole superstructure of autocratic Russia (25). Populist was a term that originally used by the Russian Marxists to differentiate themselves from all the various intelligentsia group that disagreed with them.

There were more than those three revolutions that happened in Russia. But, the revolution that left big impact and being an inspiration for many 20th century revolutions was the Russian revolution of 1917. The Russian Revolution of 1917 is usually called as two revolutions. The first one is in February when they overthrew the imperial government and the second one is in October that placed the Bolsheviks in power. The Bolsheviks were The Russian Social Democratic Labour Party who followed Lenin’s lead (30).

The 1917 revolution began in the last week of February. The cause of this revolution is bread shortages, strikes, and locks out that happen after the Russia-German war. As the addition, a demonstration in honour of International Women’s Day by female workers of the Vyborg district brought a crowd on to the streets of Petrograd that the authorities could not disperse (44). At that time, Tsar Nicholas II as the emperor of Russia showed his weakness in leading the country. He was absent to visit Army Headquarters in Mogilev.

This February revolution contributes bigger events happens in Russia. Starts from Nicholas’ abdication, then followed by the politicians of Petrograd’s activity that have original intention to get rid of Tsar Nicholas II (45), and in November 1917, Bolshevik forces lead by Vladimir Lenin’s lieutenant, Leon Trotsky seized government buildings in Petrograd and took control of Russia.

The 1917 revolution really put Russia in chaos. The February Revolution had given birth to a formidable array of workers' organizations in all Russia's industrial centres, but especially in Petrograd and Moscow (55). The rising of this working class militancy suffered the urban workers, because the industrialists made them as target. Then after the Bolshevik took control over Russia, they took over the lead in the factories too.
The description of The Russian Revolution can be found in a literary work entitle Animal Farm by George Orwell. Animal Farm is a political fable set in a farmyard but based on Stalin's betrayal of the Russian Revolution. Orwell is well known as critical and straightforward author. While other intellectuals and journalist were struggling to make excuses for the Soviet system, Orwell risked his reputation to expose its many evils (Shelden 56).

According to Professor Michael Shelden in his book “The World of George Orwell”, Eric Arthur Blair was George Orwell’s real name. He was born in Bengal, India on June 25, 1903. Blair is the son of Richard Blair, a civil servant at the lower rungs of the British Empire. A year after Eric born, Ida Blair, his mother, did what many colonial wives did in India. She left the hot climate and settled in England with her children, bringing the two up alone while she waited for her husband to serve out the remaining years of his work (9).

Orwell was educated in England. He already shows his interest in writer’s world since he is eleven. He receives good education and military training in his school. And after he leaves Eton, his previous school, Orwell joined the Indian Imperial Police in Burma and a British colony after that. He resigned in 1927 and decided to become a writer. In 1928, he moved to Paris where lack of success as a writer, and forced himself to got other jobs. He described his experiences in his first book, Down and Out in Paris and London, published in 1933. He took the name George Orwell, shortly before the publication of the book.

Different from Down and Out in Paris and London, Orwell got rejected many times when he wanted to publish Animal Farm. The reason of that rejection was because this book was too controversial. This book was published in 1945, but it was successful in the late 1950s. Even though the publication of this book was delayed, but the book became a great success after its publication. Unfortunately, Orwell’s health was deteriorating and he died at young age because of tuberculosis on January 21, 1950. So that he cannot celebrate his novel success.

Animal Farm is one of Orwell’s popular novels. The other one is Nineteen Eighty Four. These two novels have been translated into sixty languages and have sold more than thirty million copies (6). He wrote Animal Farm between November 1943 and February 1944.

Animal Farm itself is a kind of modern fable. This novel talks about a group of animals which did rebel and oust the humans from the farm where they live. The animals run the farm themselves, and rename the farm from Manor Farm into Animal Farm. The pigs are chosen to manage the farm by other animals because they are smarter than others. Beyond expectation, Animal Farm begins well than people expected. Snowball, one of the three cleverest pigs teaches the other animals how to read and write, though few animals besides the pigs learn to read well. Food is plentiful due to a good harvest, and the entire farm is organized and running smoothly. The animals live and work happily, because they think that they’re works for themselves, not for human that they hate. But, in the end of the story, Animal Farm was being the same with The Manor Farm. Manor Farm was the name of the farm when owned by Mr. Jones, the human. Even it becomes worse because Napoleon, the only Berkshire pig on the farm runs Animal farm tyrannically.
There are some reasons why the writer chooses Animal Farm by George Orwell as her thesis research. First of all, the writer finds out some articles on internet which explain that Animal Farm by George Orwell have some relation with The Russian Revolution. But the information is so vague, and there is no specific thesis or books which explained more about that. The second, the writer is interested in characters of the novel, and wants to explore more about how Orwell characterize the people in The Russian Revolution into his novel’s characters. The third, the writer wants to know the reason and the goal that Orwell wants to achieve by writing this novel. The last, the writer is interested in the class arranging between the animals and the political view that involved in the novel. At the beginning of twentieth century, classes is still exists in Russia. The people there split into four groups: urban, peasants, clergy, and noble.

In this study, the writer will try to prove that this novel is the reflection of The Russian Revolution. The analysis in this paper will include about the history of Russian Revolution, the main characters in The Russian Revolution, the events that happened at that time and how they influence the event in the novel.

1.2. Statement of the Problem

The statement of problem of this study is: how does Animal Farm reflects The Russian Revolution in 1917?
